BAYONE Elevate
Sales Transformation Workshop

Pre-Work

We look forward to meeting you at the BayOne Elevate_Sales Transformation Workshop. To maximize the workshop's impact, please share your perspective on the current business environment and the opportunities you are pursuing. Your insights will help shape our shared path to excellence.

Collecting your thoughts and responding to the questions is likely to take about 30 minutes of your time at best. Your responses will remain confidential. Each question requires only 'crisp bullet-point' answers in a few words that capture your key thoughts.

Please send us your completed pre-work via email to anand@salesoxigen.com by 20th March, it will help us in our preparations for the workshop.

Thanks in advance, for your contribution!

Instructions

1. Read "Categories of Change for Your Customers," and provide few examples of changes that you can identify for your customers.
2. Review the definition of a Complex Sale and select qualified opportunities to work with during the selling process. The "Data Gathering" worksheet will allow you to briefly gather data for three opportunities you are currently working on. The best opportunities will be those which are not at a too early stage.
3. Print the worksheet pages and bring them to the session, where you will discuss and create strategies for these opportunities.

Categories of Change for Your Customers

Businesses go through change in six key areas. Think about how change is affecting your customers' world and provide several examples that you're able to identify for your customers.

1. Marketplace: What are the industries where your customers are attempting to thrive (e.g., healthcare, telecommunications, manufacturing)? What changes to demographics, politics, and economics are occurring within those marketplaces?

   Example: There is growing pressure on organizations to reduce their environmental footprint and adopt sustainable practices

2. Customers: What is happening with youfr customers' customers and your customers' target customers? Changes might be creating opportunities or making it more difficult for them to make their own sales.

   Example: Customers perceive a lack of online data security, resulting in fewer signups for a social media company.

3. Competition: Who is your customers' competition, and how do they affect your customers' business today? What is going on in the competitive landscape that your customer is trying to thrive in?

   Example: A new company from Singapore is threatening an American tech manufacturer's worldwide market share.

4. Products: Your customers' products are always changing. What new products are they about to release? Which are they discontinuing or no longer supporting? What are the popular opinions about their products?

   Example: The release of two new software programs is increasing revenue, but complaints are surfacing about older programs that are no longer supported.

5. Strategy and Tactics: Are your customers deploying the right kinds of strategies and tactics to sell their products or services? Do you even know what those are? What are they communicating through their website or when they go (or don't go) to trade shows? How are they deploying salespeople? What are they doing to get their products into the marketplace?

   Example: A manufacturer with an online store recently went through a $100,000 e-commerce website redesign.

6. Organization: How is the organization itself changing? Have there been changes in leadership? Layoffs? Reorganizations? Territory realignments? What effect does this have throughout the organization?

Data Gathering

Choose only qualified opportunities where you are not certain of winning the deal. Please pick complex deals meeting the following criteria:

1. The buying organization has many options to choose from.
2. There are many levels involved in decision making
3. The buying organization's buying process is complex.
